(3) Objectives

As we celebrate the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between Japan and Singapore this year, the two countries held a Summit Meeting, where the two countries agreed to elevate bilateral relations to a Strategic Partnership. In the Joint Statement issued following the Summit Meeting, the two countries also expressed their intention to expand exchanges with a view to deepening cooperation in disaster risk reduction.

Against this backdrop, as concrete actions to further advance cooperation between the two countries, the following activities are scheduled to take place from 28 to 30 October 2026:

- ① The signing of a Memorandum of Cooperation (MoC) on disaster risk reduction between the Cabinet Office of Japan and the Ministry of Home Affairs of Singapore; and
- ② The joint hosting of the Singapore International Disaster and Emergency Management Expo (SIDEX) and the Asian Conference on Disaster Reduction (ACDR), as SIDEX-ACDR 2026.

In Singapore, there is a growing momentum to strengthen disaster preparedness, including coastal protection efforts. Leveraging the aforementioned initiatives as a catalyst, Japan hopes to contribute to promoting disaster risk reduction and strengthening disaster response capacities not only in Singapore but also across the Asia-Pacific region through the overseas deployment of Japan's advanced disaster management technologies.

This event is being held on the eve of these initiatives, with the aim of building momentum for further deepening disaster risk reduction cooperation between Japan and Singapore. It will provide a platform for broad exchanges and networking among senior government officials from both Japan and Singapore,

Japanese companies visiting Singapore in conjunction with SDEX-ACDR 2026, and disaster management officials from countries across the Asia-Pacific region.
